We'll Swim - Refugees

Times News Services Hong Kong refused landing permission today to 2,700 desperate Vietnamese refugees holding a ship's captain virtual prisoner and threatening to swim ashore.

"We have no choice but to jump overboard," said Nguyen Thua Hon, a 39year-old engineer who spoke for the refugees off Hong Kong aboard the Huey Fong, a 2,794-ton Panamanian-refreighter that picked them up from nine small boats floundering in the South China Sea.

aboard," he added in an interview on shore-to-ship

But Hong Kong Security Secretary Lewis Davies reiterated the government's re-fusal to extend landing per-mission to the vessel that has been anchored just a few hundred feet from the col-ony's Po Toi island since it arrived Saturday.

"The government's stand remains that in accordance with agreements accepted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees," Davies told a news conference. "The vessel will be required to proceed to its next port of call.

Meanwhile, a b o u t 200 other Vietnamese are believed to have drowned at sea when they tried to scramble aboard a freighter which arrived in Manila today with 2,300 refugees aboard.

Werner Blatter, Philip pines representative of the UN High Commission for Refugees, said the drownings occurred a few days ago when the Panamanianregistered freighter Tung An stopped to pick up refu-gees in the South China

Blatter said the Tung An's captain, Sheu Dah Shing, told him the freighter was on a voyage from Bangkok to Hong Kong when it spotted a refugee boat in international waters near Vietnam.

"When it stopped to pick them up, more and more boats kept appearing," Blat-ter said. "The captain esti-mated 200 had drowned in aboard the freighter.

The Tung An, already turned away by Brunei, a country on the north coast of Borneo, has been refused permission to land its refugees in the Philippines.

A foreign ministry statement said those who required medical treatment would be allowed to go ashore but would have to return to the vessel when recovered.

"Conditions aboard the ship are appalling," Blatter said. "It is hopelessly over-

Oil Strikes Force Iran To Rations

Times News Services TEHRAN — Soldiers fired on a funeral procession for an anti-shah professor today, and hospital officials said at least four of the thousands of mourners were killed.

The government, meanwhile, imposed fuel rationing on this oil-rich country because of a crippling petroleum workers' strike

Officials at Pahlavi Hospital said it received four bodies and 22 wounded from the procession attack. A spokesman for the National Front, the chief opposition group, said at least six had been killed, and a government spokesman denied there were any deaths, though he said several persons had been wounded.

The Front spokesman said several persons were shot dead in other clashes today between security forces and demonstrators in Tehran.

At one point, mobs of anti-nah demonstrators streamed toward the U.S. embassy, but Iranian troops fired automatic weapons in the air to chase them. The protestors scattered, then regrouped and moved on to Where Are the Givers?

The recent death of W. J. Van Dusen, a Vancouver logging company executive who spent his retirement giving much of his money away to his city, reminds us that the city across the water has a wealth (no pun intended) of public-minded millionaires who have enriched their city and their fellow citizens.

It also points up in sharp contrast their absence in Victoria. With one magnificent exception -Thomas Shanks McPherson who proves the rule, there have not been very many grand benefactors on the scale of a VanDusen or an H. R. MacMillan in Vancouver, who are among several who got rich in and around the city, chiefly in the forest industry, and who returned much of this wealth

MacMillan gave his fellow Vancouverites a wonderful planetarium and a hilltop arboretum; the recently-deceased VanDusen provided the land for the botanical gardens named after him on the city's west side, and endowed the Vancouver Foundation to seek out other uses for his money. Walter and Thea Koerner built a graduate student centre and have provided grants for many university students and research projects. The Woodward merchandising family endowed the University of B.C. with much of the school of medicine's architecture. MacMillan's alma mater too, it received large gifts which enabled it to build a new building for the faculty of forestry and to purchase many, many books.

For similar examples of generosity in Victoria, one searches long and hard. There was McPherson's wonderful bequest to his adopted city more than a decade ago, which allowed Victoria to build a new Crystal pool, to make. a civic theatre at the back of Centennial Square and which gave the University of Victoria a library. And former mayor Peter Pollen has provided the land for what will be a harbor park.

But that is about the beginning and the end to anyone's list. (Some might mention the Dunsmuirs, but what did they leave Victoria or Nanaimo, where they made tens of millions of dollars in coal mining? Their extravagant mansions remain, but only because they were purchased with public

Why is it so? Does Victoria lack for millionaires? It would not seem so, to judge from real estate prices in Uplands and parts of Oak Bay, and the number of Rolls-Royces seen around town.

Perhaps one reason is that, like so many other ordinary people, Victorians with wealth came here from somewhere else, to live, to retire, to visit. They haven't put down strong roots in the area, and naturally do not regard this city of strangers as a suitable subject for their benefactions.

Island N-Power

Your coverage of the address (Island N-Power Generator Not on the Books: Hydro; Times, Dec. 12) to the Chemainus Rotary club by Charles Nash, B.C. Hydro's executive assistant to Robert Bonner, was seriously misleading. Mr. Nash did not say that "Nonsense" refers to talk that the twin 500,000 volt transmission lines, whose corridor Hydro is now building along our east coast from Parksville to Victoria, would eventually be used to take power from reactors on Vancouver Island to the mainland.

This is the minor point. The main point is that Hydro plans to go nuclear on Vancouver Island. Mr. Bonner said recently we will have it "whether people like it or not." The whether people like it or not." ple like it or not." The study Hydro recently made public — which they say supersedes all other studies — Vancouver Island Power Supply 1982-1996, provides six timetables for major power projects to supply the demand they project for us. Five of the plans include one or more often two well. include one or, more often, two nu-clear reactors. The plan they recommend as most economic (Plan B) in cludes one on stream by 1995 and a second in 1996. Mr. Nash would not nonsense. Discussing Plan D (includes two reactors: 1991 and 1994) on page 6-11, the report says (but does not explain): "Although the contribution of these large nuclear units to the dependable capacity and firm energy of the Vancouver Island power system is limited, they would nevertheless provide a much higher contribution of dependable power to the integrated provincial power system." Unless Hydro plans to build yet another high voltage $300 million dollar corridor to the mainland by 1991-4, how would our projected nuclear generators contrib-ute to the provincial system? (The Cheekeye-Dunsmuir line, scheduled in service by 1983, would be bringing power from the provincial grid, from the proposed Revelstoke and then Peace River Site C dams, which are also being opposed by local people. The power flow in the line can be reversed.)

The author of Hydro's study warns us that if people won't accept nuclear power, they will have to go to large thermal coal generators with, he suggests, worse environmental problems The energy contributions or costs of comprehensive energy conservation, or of renewable sources, are nowhere estimated. In his address, Mr. Nash dismissed these as "likely-to be small" in the next 20 years.

Yet consider the following fact: a building designed with more insula-tion, shutters for the windows and south-facing windows to collect the sun, can save 60 to 70 per cent of its heating cost. Can this be called a "small" contribution? This is the minimum passive solar heating.

A fact that sheds some light here is that 80 per cent of housing starts on the Island install electric baseboard heat (the least energy-efficient space heating system). Hydro's growth forecast

What position does Hydro's study take on passive solar heating? Encouraging this sort of thing will lead to people switching "to non-renewable oil, increasing the need for imported oil, counter to stated federal energy policy." (p. 7-4).

The contribution of industrial cogeneration using waste word is esti-mated, and then dismissed because someone expects a hog fuel shortage on the Island by 1980. The author tinuing in order to confirm this conclu Hydro's growth forecast is based on expected industrial growth as another major factor.

In short, Hydro is propagandizing us to accept Mr. Bonner's "big ticket" answer, and perhaps misleading us in the process. No planning that they will be acceptable to the public can afford to ignore renewable energy income sources, which are the only real alternatives. These include using our waste streams and making methane and oil from sewage and garbage: Hydro doesn't even mention

We'll have to go to these sources in the end, when all the oil, gas and uranium run out. Let's do it now, and save ourselves all that pollution.— Hilda Kellington, Solar Alternatives to Nuclear Energy, Box 56, Crofton Wine as Medicine?

So misleading is the article Wine Best Medicine? It Can Sure Help: MD (Times, Dec. 12), it is surprising that you published it at all, despite the question mark.

What informed person would risk having author E. A. Maury, M.D., as medical advisor in any germ- or viruscaused illness, e.g., flu, typhoid or other fever, tuberculosis, etc?

In such diseases we are protected by an army of white blood corpuscles by an army of white blood corpusers, which attack invading germs, generally successfully. Alcohol, going directly into the blood from the stomach, hampers and blocks their defensive capability, with the result that wine plus flu can mean pneumonia and death. Tuberculosis occurs much more with alcohol in the picture.

Went Too Far

Letters to the editor are fine for letting off steam but I feel that Owen S. L. Moore went a bit too far when he said that Vic Stephens "would reduce taxes, increase wages and give away until the money ran out and he realized his error.

Vic Stephens would indeed reduce taxes, dramatically so, but the rest of the statement conveys an impression the opposite of the truth. The high cost of the bureaucracy and governmen giveaways are two areas where Mr. Stephens plans to save money, not spend more. His philosophy is that the people who create wealth are, on the average, able to spend it to far better effect than the politicians and bureau-crats can and his intention is to take away as little as possible in taxes.— John Green, Executive Assistant to the Conservative Caucus.

Made My Day

I saw a Mrs. Ramsay turn in a substantial sum of money that she found on the floor of one of the empori-ums on the outskirts of our city.

She put aside temptation and treated some other person as she herself would like to be treated.

Pay As You Burn

Victoria Ald. Ron McKenzie is traditionally considered to be the local politician most entranced with the concept of "user-pay" having the actual users of government services pay the cost of them instead of spreading the burden across all the taxpayers - but from Manitoba comes word that even he has been one-upped by three municipalities there.

The rural municipalities of Dauphin, Portage La Prairie and Cornwallis have begun to apply the user-pay concept to fire pro-

In Dauphin and Portage La Prairie, the owners of property to which fire trucks are called must pay $200 per call. In Cornwallis, the burden is even greater: property owners are billed for the entire cost of fire calls, estimated to average between $250 and $850.

Representatives of the three municipalities say the policy provides a tax break for the residents who don't use the fire department during the year. Also, they suggest, the thought of the bill makes residents think twice about calling the fire department to put out minor blazes.

The Winnipeg fire chief, how-ever, was doubtful about the program. He said that to try to save the $200, residents might not call the fire department in cases where it was needed, leading to greater property damage.

But it's clear that user-pay has not yet been taken to all extremes. Perhaps next a municipality could try billing the victims of burglars for the costs of the investigation. How about it, Ron?

Old Mandarins All Gone in Ottawa

OTTAWA — Its passing almost unnoticed, the old Ottawa mandarin class has died out, replaced by a new breed of public service managers.

The true mandarins were an exclusive group, separated from the rest of the public service by status, accepted by others as men of superior talent and dedication. The key to their role was the way in which other seniors in the civil service knew they were special.

As a class, they recruited each other, with older men watching for particularly promising comers. Once they were identified, the careers of the near-mandarins were nurtured by assignments that gave them scope.

By no means all deputy ministers became members of that special club even in its heyday. The distinctions were subtle but everyone well-connected in Ottawa knew perfectly well who was a mandarin and who was just another deputy.

Despite the anonymity that in tradition if not reality marks the senior official, some of the mandarins became famous men. Their personalities varied greatly along with their educational specialities. It did not matter much what educational track a mandarin had followed in his youth, although it was probably helpful if his studies had been at Queens University, because in later life they were all great generalists, not specialists.

Internal Leadership

They were sometimes criticized for exclusiveness but usually applauded for dedication. Their existence as a class provided the public service with an internal leadership that is no longer there in a greatly enlarged, far more highly paid service.

The names of the great mandarins may never have been quite household may never have been quite household words but they were well-known to those who study government and follow its events: Norman Robertson, Clifford Clark, Arnold Heeney, Robert Bryce and a good many others, such as O.D. Skelton and Hume Wrong. Robertson, Clark and Heeney are dead. Bryce is in a sort of active retirement, writing and working at the Public Service Commission's executive development establishment. He frequently presides over seminars and those who participate find his willingness to share the great body of knowledge he accumulated over the years an enriching experience.

Their quality as generalists rather than specialists was one of the bonds between the mandarins. The other notable one was their ideal of public service and, because they both re-cruited and brought promising people along, there were able to implant high standards in the public service, which had much to do with the old claim that it was the world's best.

There are many worthy people in the employment of the government today but not many would claim that the ideal of public service still is widespread in the old sense. It has been replaced by more mundane career considerations. The mandarins were not highly-paid, except for one or two in the last years of their active careers. Today there are a great many very well-paid civil servants and the career considerations that move them are far closer to those of professionals in any industry than to the standards of the mandarins.

The last active mandarins probably The last active mandarins probably were James Grandy and Ed Ritchie. Grandy retired early from the public service a few years ago finding changes in the role of the senior official and the appreciation accorded him distasteful. Ritchie, now ambassador in Dublin, was felled by a severe stroke and and heart attack while he was undersecretary of state for external affairs.

for external affairs. One of the most interesting figures on the edge of the mandarin class, never a full member of it, was Tom Kent in his days as former Prime Minister Pearson's right hand man. Kent's role was political where theirs was official, but he possessed the richness of ideas, drive and dedication that made him a respected if some-times controversial figure. Like the true mandarins, he was a generalist — in his school days he had been better trained in chemistry than most other subjects.

The mandarin class was killed, at least in part, by the exceptionally rapid growth of the public service and the equally rapid rise in executive salaries within the service. The mandarins had become a class during a period in which growth in government service was relatively slow and when an ideal of service was an almost essential substitute for rich financial

An equally large factor in the death of the class was the sort of ideas which Prime Minister Trudeau brought to the structure of government. He greatly extended the committee system of decision-making, which diminished the role and responsibility of ministers and necessarily of the most senior officials as well. The relation ship between minister and deputy was subtly altered, with both becoming less independent figures and more cogs in committee machinery. This is the so-called collegiality of decisionmaking and it negates personal responsibility.

Pierre Trudeau also greatly strengthened both the prime minis-ter's office and the privy council of-fice. Strength did not grow at the centre without eroding strength in the departments. As prime ministers. Lehr departments. As prime minister, John Diefenbaker distrusted the mandarins because he felt that long years of Liberal government had left them too indoctrinated in the ideas of their political masters. Trudeau seems to have distrusted them as part of his more general distrust of individual responsibility, preferring collective responsibility as a substitute.

Who Could Fill It?

When Diefenbaker became prime minister a situation of great tension developed between himself and the most senior officials. Bryce, then clerk of the privy council, is almost always credited with having been the man who bridged the gap and made a transition of power possible without an unbeauted. Credit in the control of the council of the counci upheaval. Greatly respected by his fellow officials, he won the confidence of the prime minister. There cannot have been many periods in Canadian history when the responsibility on a single official was so heavy. Some ministers and officials in that period found they could not work to-gether, the outstanding case being Gordon Churchill and Mitchell Sharp, for a time his deputy. The parting came fairly quickly and Sharp went off to the private sector for a time, then to Liberal party politics.

The present clerk of the privy council, Michael Pitfield, is so closely identified with Trudeau, perhaps unavoidably, that many doubt that he could fill the Bryce role if there is a change of government next year. It is

STONE ON STONE

A distinguished U.S. journalist, I.F. Stone this year turned 70. For two decades he single-handedly published I. F. Stone's Weekly, a Washington newsletter that won respect for its courage and integrity. Here he interviews himself for The New York Times Magazine on his thoughts and what he's up to nowadays.

One Man's 'Retirement'

What is it like suddenly to find yourself 70?

A little startling, but not bad. For some strange reason, the birthday which most depressed me was my 19th. I felt that my life was practically over, and I had yet to produce a masterpiece. Later milestones I took in my stride, and 50 would have been unnerving if I hadn't been so busy at the time. I felt no trauma on my 70th.

What — if you will pardon the expression — is old age like?

As you move into it, even for someone like myself who gave up conventional religious views long ago, every day seems a gift from God. When you feel that any day may be the day before your last, you savor it—the sky, the trees, the birds, the leaves underfoot. You begin to wonder—is death a sleep, or is this life a chrysalis, a preparation for a new adventure?

What are your regrets?

At the risk of appearing smug — none, really, not even that I didn't learn Greek earlier, for I would have missed the joy of doing it now.

What do you count your blessings?

Above all, a good and loving wife; none better ever walked the earth. I met Esther on a blind date and a borrowed dollar (later, fully repaid) 50 years ago last April and married her two years later. She is the chief reason why I retain my bounce and zest. We enjoy our life together immensely, and still go out to a disco several times a month for rock-androll. We have a modest retirement fund from our Weekly, four grandchildren and a special delight in being called grandma and grandpa.

Are you enjoying retirement?

Immensely.

Is that a wholly truthful answer — don't you miss the excitement of being a reporter?

Not really, though I do get firehorse twinges occasionally, when the alarm bells ring louder than usual, and I still read four papers a day with fascination but without regret.

What's the secret of being happy, though retired?

Be mad enough to embark on a whole new career. Prepare for retirement with a project about which you're passionate but which you couldn't pursue in your previous harried existence. Otherwise it can be dreadful. The very word evokes horror.

What's your therapeutic mad-

For almost two decades before retirement, I thought that when I got off the wheel — as I think a Buddhist would say — of journalism, I would do a study in depth of what concerns me most — freedom of thought and expression, and how to preserve it against the new excuses for repression bound to arise in every generation. Just freedom of thought, not "liberty," which is too vague and slippery and may include, as it often has and does, the freedom to exploit others.

What do you start from?

A conviction nothing can shake:
That a society in which men are not free to speak their minds is not a good society, no-matter what material benefits it may offer the few or the many. In this I am not afraid to confess myself an old-fashioned liberal; Milton and Jefferson are my heroes. The only absolute value I would affirm is freedom of the mind—without it there cannot be social justice, which is our duty to others.

Where did you begin your studies?

A few years ago, after I gave up my Weekly for health reasons. I spent a year studying the two English revolutions of the 17th century, to which we owe Milton's Areopagitica, the most eloquent defence of a free press ever written — a malediction on journalism schools which do not make their students read it! But then, by a natural regression, as every researcher in history must know, I felt I could not understand the English 17th century without understanding the Reformation, nor the Reformation without the Middle Ages (where precursors of Luther and Voltaire may already be found, if one looks closely), and finally, I landed back in the Athens of the fifth and fourth centuries B.C., the first extended period of free thought and free speech known to us. There I fell in love with the Athenians and the Ionians, and I have been there ever

How did you go about your studies?

I got back from a visit to St. Antony's at Oxford in May '74, longing for a university atmosphere, and began walking every day to American University, the campus nearest my home (four kilometers) in Washington.

How did you get in?

The answer makes me blush. I just walked over there and buried myself in the library stacks and started reading.

Where did you start?

I decided it would be best to take a fresh look at the ancient sources themselves. There Plato, by sheer bulk and brilliance, dominates the landscape. I began reading Plato intensively, but spreading out on specific questions to the pre-Socratics and Aristotle, to Xenophon and Thucydides, to Aristophanes and the three tragedians, and even to the New Testament, Philo Judaeus, the neo-Platonists and the Church Fathers — St. Augustine has some very perspicacious remarks on Plato in Book VIII of The City of God.

And the university authorities didn't interfere?

On the contrary, after more than a year of this wholly unofficial matriculation, instead of being picked up by the campus police as a vagrant with.no visible means of support, I was elected Distinguished Scholar in Residence — no less — and given a cubbyhole in the literature department, and there I've been studying and writing ever since.

It sounds as if you've become a cholar.

That would be a premature claim. I prefer the term coined by Frank Getlein, a Washington literary critic of distinction. He called me a recycled freshman. That fits me comfortably. What could be more exciting than being a freshman, busily rediscovering what everyone else takes for granted

What are your academic qualifi-

Chutzpah plus zest plus temerity. I wake up at nights with a feeling of vertigo at having dared to wade far over my head into so vast a sea of knowledge, but I calm my Angst by doing bits of Greek in my head.

Was there anything in your background to draw you into it?

Yes. Half a century ago I had to choose between college teaching and journalism. I was a philsophy major at the University of Pennsylvania, where I was in love with pre-Socratics and had a wonderful scholar, Professor W. R. Newbold, as teacher. But I was working as a newspaperman while going to school (and had begun to do so even in secondary school) and the burden of a full-time newspaper job and college was too much. I opted for the newspoom and dropped out in my junior year. So in a sense I have gone back to where I left off in 1927.

Did you have any Greek when you were at college?

I had a year of Greek but got no further than Xenophon's Anabasis, though I did have six years of Latin at secondary school and college.

How about your book?

After almost a year of total immersion in Greek studies, I suddenly found a focus. With this I can freshly retell the familiar story of Greek civilization as it relates to freedom of thought. I'm trying to keep the focus my secret until I've finished. I have an outline which grew into a summary and the summary itself into chapters. Unfortunately, everything leads to everything else, and I'm a perfectionist and I have so much to learn and it's such a job to check out and chase down every fine point not only among the ancients but also among modern scholars to see how they have treated it. So I blunder through the scholarly literature happily, with my rusty Latin and often inadequate German and workable French, and have even done a little, when necessary, in Italian and Spanish. I've been having a ball.

Aren't you making it harder for yourself by trying to learn Greek at the same time? Isn't this another example of the writer's resourcefulness in finding ways to put off the painful task of writing?

It may be. I didn't intend to learn Greek when I started. I thought I would be doing a rather cursory survey of freedom of thought in ancient Greece based on standard sources. There is hardly a point in Greek and especially Platonic studies where one does not find oneself caught in the crossfire of violent and sometimes ill-tempered controversy between equally respected scholars.

Why?

First of all, because the materials we have are fragmentary. What remains is a sort of giant jigsaw puzzle, many pieces of which are irretrievably lost. From these scattered bits and pieces the scholars construct more or less plausible patterns — not unlike Washington correspondents — in accordance with their preconceptions. Much of what is only surmise or conjecture is presented as certainty.

Why are the controversies so heated?

Personal pride is one factor. But there is a more honorable one. The issues are living issues. They involve passionately held beliefs as to the good life and the good society. All man's problems, individual and social, were already confronted in the Greek world. That's what makes its study so enriching.

What is the principal contro-

In political philosophy, it's basically a battle between the partisians of the common man and those who despise him. The dividing line, now as then, is between the democrats and elitists. Most of the scholarship, like most of the sources which have survived, have been distrustful or contemptuous of democracy, especially Plato and most of the Platonists.

What makes you think that after all these centuries of violent controversy, you can find something new to

The great British classicist Gilbert Murray said that each generation must reread the classics for itself. In effect, we enrich the past by seeing it anew through the eyes of the present. The classics are deep wells from which fresh water can always be drawn. Then there is a remark by Jakob Burckhardt, the Swiss historian of Greek civilization and of the Renaissance, which comforts me in my dark hours. A hundred years from today, he once said, someone will reread Thucydides and find something we all overlooked. So, reporter that I still am, I am drawn by the hope of one last scoop.

How do you expect to make new findings?

As in science, fresh questions elicit fresh insights. That's how scientific discoveries have often been made.

What basic principles do you

I have two. One is Freud's obsevation that we overlook what we do not wish to see.

And the other principle?

Marx's remark in the "18th Brumaire," his most brilliant essay. It deals with Napoleon III. In it Marx says that history is a form of politics. That was not meant as an excuse-inadvance for distorting history. What Marx meant isjobvious, once he said it. In English history, for example, we have Macaulay, the Whig historian, and Hume, the Tory historian. They picture the 17th-century revolutions quite differently because of their differing partisan preconceptions. But there are elements of truth in both, and we need both for fuller understanding.

How does that apply to Greek studies?

Very strikingly. Most Platonists, like Plato himself, have been elitist and anti-democratic, but one of the greatest British Platonists was prodemocratic and his bias proved fruitful not only in the presentation of Greek history but in 19th-century British politics.

Who was that?

A British banker turned scholar, George Grote, another of my heroes. George Grote, another of my neroes. His career in the 19th century illustrates what Marx meant. Grote helped Bentham write and push through Parliament the Reform Bill. of 1832, which was the first step in widening the right to vote in England. Then he retired to write a new history of Greece, which became a best seller, in part because he gave the old story fresh political relevance. Before Grote's time, the best-known British history of Greece was by a Tory country gentleman named Mitford who dedicated his history significantly to George III. Mit-ford used Greek history to demon-strate the folly and turbulence of de-mocracy. Grote was the first to write Greek history from a pro-democratic viewpoint. He focused on the demo-cratic glories of Periclean. Athens. His history became a weapon of Brit ish politics and gave ammunitiion to the pro-democratic forces which fin-ally succeeded in enacting manhood suffrage in England. The writing of history was never more clearly form of politics. And Grote, too, like Gibbon, was an amateur, not a professional historian. That also encour-

But why add to your burden by learning Greek?

Because political preconceptions affect the translations. I found that you could not make valid political inferences from a translation, no matter how competent. You have to go to the text and examine the crucial word or phrase for yourself to get its full meaning. At first I remembered only enough Greek to be able, laboriously, to compare translations and then turn to the Greek text and spot the key word in Greek and look it up for myself in the Greek-English lexicon. The problem is not just political preconceptions, but the fact that the Greek words are not fully congruent with any English equivalent.

What do you mean by congrunt?

In geometry, as you know, two triangles are congruent if one fits exactly over another. But in translating, even from modern languages, a word in a foreign language rarely fits exactly over a word in English. They may be identical in some areas of usage and quite different in others. A translator is pinned down to the choice of one equivalent, when the foreign term really can be understood only by a full exegesis of description of the word's history, its changes and its nuances.

His Concern is With the Future

But why did you go from this limited verbal analysis into the study of Greek on which you are now embarked?

I was shamed and seduced into Shamed? How?

I well remember that terrible morning in the basement stacks at American University, before I had acquired my office and title, when I discovered that Bishop Thirlwall, the great Whig historian of Greece, had already learned Greek at the age of four. Luckily, I was not armed, or I would have shot myself there and then beside the shelves of classics. How could I dare, in my late 60's, to begin the long and rocky ascent to the distant peaks of that intricate language at my age? On the other hand, how could I dare to write about the Greeks without knowing their language? It was a crisis.

How did you surmount it?

A few days later I discovered that Thomas Hardy didn't begin to learn' Greek until he was 80. This cheered me immensely, I felt I had a full start of more than a decade on Hardy.

So that was the shame. Where was the seduction?

The seduction began, Deo gratias when I was stricken last winter with a virus. To understand the blessings of that virus. I must explain that little by little, to supplement my modicum of Greek, I had begun to memorize conjugations and declensions on my walks to and from school and to learn a little Greek grammar. Those who have studied Greek will know what I mean when I say that luo, the basic Greek verbal paradigm, and just about the only regular verb in the whole language, was my onstant companion. Day after day, I wrestled with the middle and the orist and the subjunctive, up, down Nebraska Avenue. And the de lensions. Passersby never realized the syntactical horrors that elderly duffer they encountered on their walks was silently undergoing in

So what did the virus do?

I was too sick to walk or work, but not too sick to read. I had nothing better to do so I started on the Odyssey in Greek. I didn't even have a Homeric lexicon, and it was enormously difficult.

It must have been slow going.

Unbelievably. I had to chase all kinds of strange Homeric forms through a standard Attic Greek dictionary. If I hadn't been in bed I would never have persevered. I continued with it as bedtime reading, but when I was halfway through Book I of the Odyssey. I acquired a Homeric primer based on the Iliad and switched. It took me nine months of bedtime reading to finish the first book.

How thoroughly did you do jt?

I wrote out each line in Greek in a notebook and then parsed each word. I had 257 pages of notes when I finished. I told someone I had put so much work into the Hliad I felt I deserved a joint byline with Homer.

Was it worth the trouble?

Absolutely. I felt grateful that I had lived to get into the Iliad. I've been a bookworm and lover of poetry since boyhood and I have read Homer in a half-dozen different translations, with pleasure. But now I feel that I really had no conception of what Homer was until I dug into the original. Poetry is untranslatable. What is imperishable when said by a poet in one language can be banal or pedestrian in another. The Iliad, in translation, is a big mishmash of war and mythology.

Isn't the original?

Yes, true, in a way, but no, no, no. Whoever - there must have been a Homer — put the ancient lays to-gether into their present form was a getter into their present getter artistry. This is no primitive epic. It's a work of exquisite grace and power. Homer, like the greatest artists of all time, knew the art of painting a whole picture with a single stroke. What we admire in Flaubert and in Picasso, is all there, many times. Picasso is all there, many times over, in Homer: Homer is to poetry what the Bible is to prose, the fountainhead, the source, the gold mine For the Greeks it had everything the virile oratory, the lyric passages, the diverse humanity both in gods and men (you think of Shakespeare when you try to match it), and the sheer narrative power. I had read the story umpteen times: I knew Achillies wasn't going to do a damned thing against Agamemnon but run to his mama. Yet there I was in the morning walking to school with my schoolboy edition of the Iliad and thumbing the vocabulary excitedly to see what he was going to do next!

Are you still in Homer?

No, but I'll be back. When I finished the first book of the Iliad, I stumbled on and got hooked by two lines of Sappho. I was so enchanted that I spent a month of spare time on her, working painfully through the often agonizingly difficult Aeolic forms and the controversies over corrupt lines and did six poems, memorizing them — that's the way to really absorb Greek. Sappho's way up there in the stratosphere of lyric genius.

Where are you now?

I decided that since I had managed to scale the craggy walls into Homer and Sappho, it was time I tackled Plato in the original. So now I'm in the Apology. I've read it dozens of times in English, but no one ever told me how beautiful it was in the original. The artistry is on a level with Homer and Sappho, and therefore just as untranslatable. You can put the ideas into English, but you simply can't carry over the exquisite, delicately jeweled perfection of the original. It's hard, too, very hard, and I'm memorizing — or trying to — as I go along. As style alone, it's a supreme experience.

What about the content?

I have a love-hate relationship with Plato. Reading Plato is like riding a roller coaster. You go along in the Republic and hit a passage that makes you furious at that reactionary old aristocrat, and then you come to a passage, like the mystic simile about the sun and the idea of the good, that is intoxicating. Rereading the Phaedo in English at a library table crowded with students, I came to the death of Socrates and burst into tears. They must have thought I had gone gaga, but —

What's the but?

Nobody ever got away with so much unmitigated nonsense as Plato did out of sheer charm. The Apology itself seems to me a masterpiece of evasion and obfuscation, but a masterpiece. Plato's Socrates, though a virtuoso at the most delicately modulated prose and supersubtle pleadings, posed as just a simple downhome country boy.

So where are we?

I was trying to describe the seduction which had drawn me further into studying Greek: I know what Ulysses heard when he passed the Isle of the Sirens. But nobody had tied me to any mast. I was swept helplessly into the power of the Word, as it was sung and spoken by the most gifted people that ever lived.

And what has that to do with freedom of thought and expression, my garrulous old friend?

Some cynic just looked over my shoulder and wants to know if you would be happy now in retirement if you hadn't been successful. I don't know. I might have been embittered, I suppose. The question implies that success insures happy re-tirement. But often the op-posite is true. Applause is a drug and the more you've had, the harder suddenly to find yourself without it. When the audience has gone home, it's hard to be left alone with yourself, unless you have inner resources in-dependent of outward circumstances.

But can you understand what it is to fail?

Perhaps not. But within reasonable range, it's sur-prising to find that success and failure are not all that and failure are not all mac distinguishable. When I started my little weekly newsletter in January, 1953. I was 45. I had already been doing newspaper work for 30 years, since I was 14, and achieved considerable recognition. Coming out of the sticks, I had become an editorial writer on one New York daily, The Post, and Plato, like s many Athenian aristocrats, admired Sparta. It's the supreme example of his perversity.

Some cynic just looked over my shoulder and wants to know if you would be happy now in retirement if for me, reduced to a four-page newsletter; in an America where there seemed no more room for radical journalism.

I didn't think my new venture would last, but I was determined to see it through even if I had to use a mimeo graph machine. Yet the next two decades proved the most rewarding of my whole career. I converted what seemed to be failure - indeed a final failure — into a new success. The secret is not to mope, and to get out of bed in the morning.

You're certainly getting to be a pillar of bourgeois vir-tue. If you're not careful, you'll end up in a glass case at the Smithsonian, just down the hall from the Sneer if you must. But I'll tell you about another failure. In the '50s I was, I suppose, a failure in another' way. I had been a Washington correspondent, first for The Nation and then for PM, since September 1940, well-known and well-liked. Then in the witch-hunt atmo-sphere which began to develop with the cold war and to expand into what we call McCarthyism, I found myself isolated, an ideological Typhoid Mary. I had done the unforgivable. I had endorsed Henry Wallace for president in 1948, and he was crucified politically for ad crucified politically for advocating much the same turn to be prosecuted under that same repressive legis-lation. I had not confined myself like a respectable liberal to mistaken-identity cases, to the defence of poor old ladies who clearly couldn't have been Marxists because they were functionally illiterate and had trouble reading the evening paper, much less Das Kapi-tal. Yet in those lonely years, I never had so strong a sense of belonging, and of being American. I could re-member walking across the lawn to the Capitol and saylawn to the Capitol and saying to myself in words no family newspaper could possibly find fit to print (so I'm cleaning it up), "Well, I may be just a red blankety-blank to you bastards, but I'm keeping Jefferson alive."

The sense of being part of a historic procession, of keeping alive the best of our country's traditions, of being in the line of descent, however humbly, from the great Americans of the past, of fulfilling a newspaperman's duty to the First Amendment, this gave me a sense of inner security. A sense of common destiny, as members of one humam family, on a shrinking planet, a mote of dust in infinite space, which can survive only if we all learn to live together. When the best minds of the 19th century began to talk of a League of Nations, they were drawn to it by the impossibility of stopping the arms race so long as the world was a jungle without law, where so-called sover-eign states could decide the life or death of mankind, as they can today in the nuclear they can today in the nuclear age. Today more and more of man's problems are beyond the power even of the greatest states like America and Russia: pollution, food supply, inflation, racism, the need to keep the air clean and the seas with their fish from dying. All this needs a world order, but there can be no order without a community and no out a community and no community without a sense of common destiny, as one race, the human race.

So what do you think of America?

I love it. Objectively speaking, except for ancient Athens, I know of no other country which has had 200 years of such freedom of thought as ours. I know we've had our ups and downs. Hardly two decades have passed since Americans were denied the right to travel and to hold government jobs because they were regarded as "subversive." The "witch hunt" is a recurrent phenomenon of American life. Yet in no other society that I know of do nonconformists have stronger built-in constitu-tional safeguards to which they can appeal. And nowhere else is freedom of the press so fundamental, so much part of a secular na-tional ideology. The First Amendment gives newspapermen a status and a mandate, an honored place in society, that cannot be matched in England, much less on the European conti-nent. This role of the press as a "Fourth Estate" we owe to Jefferson. It is pecu-liarly American. I feel as

Kim: Free and Still Critical

Times News Services SEOUL — Kim Dae Jung, South Korea's principal opposition leader, was released from confinement today and promptly resumed criticism of the government that had jailed him for dissent 21/2 years

Kim called the government a "dictatorial system." asked for the end of President Park Chung Hee's emergency decree and said he would continue his criticism, even if it means returning to prison.

In an interview seven hours after his release, Kim said he still is not sure how much freedom the government will permit him.

"I firmly believe that the longer the present dictatorial system con-tinues, the more serious the ruin we may be forced to meet in the near future," he said.

Kim, 54, narrowly beaten by Park in the 1971 presidential election, had served 33 months of a five-year sentence for issuing a statement calling for the president's resignation and a return to full democracy.

He pledged today to devote the rest of his life to the restoration of full democracy, saying: "We Koreans never want to see our country become another Vietnam or a Nicaragua or an Iran where democracy has been strangled by dictators."

Kim was one of more than 5,000 people granted a sweeping amnesty by Park to mark his inauguration for another six-year term.

The amnesty, the broadest since the former army general's rule began with a bloodless coup in 1961. covered 5,378 people who were either pardoned or given reduced exists. pardoned or given reduced prison

Park also pledged to build South Korea into an industrialized welfare state.

But the president, at his swearing-in ceremony today, gave few hints that he intends to moderate his tough

Referring to a constitution that he drew up under martial law in 1972, he said reforms in the country's political system have assured national unity and maximum efficiency.

"We must solidify and develop an efficient political system that can best solve our problems, while upholding disciplined liberties," he

The 1972 constitution scrapped popular presidential elections and established a popularly chosen electoral college with no political affiliation to pick the country's president

Nine Bodies Recovered

CHICAGO John Wayne Gacy, a pudgy building contractor who sometimes entertained children with his clown act, was considered a personable, friendly man by his regirables. neighbors. But at least one neighbor wondered about the stream of teen-age boys Gacy had working at his house.

Gacy told the curious, neighbor he hired the boys-for construction work and then fired them because they could not do the job. Police fear instead he sexually molested and killed the youths — as many as 32 of them

Five bodies were brought out Tuesday from under a crawl space beneath Gacy's home in an unincorporated area near suburban Norridge Township. Four others were exhumed Friday and Saturday.

"I feel there will be more bodies," Chief Edmund Dobbs of the Cook County sheriff's police said after the search was halted at sunset Tuesday. "I don't want to speculate (how many)."

The muddy foul-smelling crawl space is "like a battle scene in there with all the trenches dug," says Dr. Robert Stein, Cook County medical examiner, "You're working right in the graves."

Dr. Stein said Tuesday night that in his 20 years as a forensic pathologist he has never come upon a morehorrifying case.

"Before this is all over with, this could be one of the most heinous crimes of the century," said Dr. Stein, who has been crawling on his stomach underneath the house house.

Gacy. 36, who once served a prison term in Iowa for sodomy, is reported to have told investigators he had sex with and then killed 32 boys and young men, burying 26 at his home and throwing six in the Des Plaines River.

He is being held on a murder charge and is scheduled to appear in court Friday.

Gacy, who was twice divorced, had lived in the house for six years, the last two alone.

Dr. Stein said he is not close to identifying any of the victims and some may never be identified. "The teeth are excellent but we still have to have the dental reports to match them," he said.

Lieut. Joseph Kozenczak, heading the investigation for Des Plaines police, said Frank Landingin, 19, of Chi-cago, whose body was found Nov. 12 in the Des Plaines River southwest of Joliet, may have been one of Gacy's victims.

Kozenczak said Landingin's naked body was found with bikini underwear stuffed in his mouth. He said that bodies found at Gacy's home also had underwear or cloth in their mouth when found.

Dobbs said about 20 men worked inside Gacy's home Tuesday. Some tore out flooring and dug through the crawl space. Technicians spread buckets of mud on the ground behind the home, looking for remains.

Gacy has been charged with killing Robert Piest, 15, of the Plainer. The youth was reported missing Dec of Des Plaines. The youth was reported missing Dec.

11. Investigators said Gacy told them he threw Piest's body and the bodies of five other youths into the Des Plaines River. Investigators dragged the river Tuesday with no siverees.

STATE FARM BEEFS AIRED IN PEKING

PEKING (Reuter) - A group of young people from south China unfurled a banner in the centre of Peking today demanding a meeting with senior leaders so that they can present grievances about life on a state farm.

The 28 youths said they will not leave Tienanmen Square until they meet Chairman Hua Kuo-feng, Vice-Chairman Teng Hsiao-ping or their representatives.

Diplomats said the protest was unusual because of its organization and the demand for meetings with Hua

Many individual Chinese come to Peking each year to present grievances but these are usually addressed to party headquarters or are given a public airing in the form of posters on Peking's Democracy Wall.

The 28 were quickly surrounded by a sympathetic crowd when they arrived in the square. They said they are educated young people who were sent to the farm in southern Yunnan province.

They told the crowd they work hard but are treated badly. One speaker cited leaking dormitories.

The Tinsel Is Starting To Tarnish

Well, that's it for another year.
Christmas is over and while we wait for 1979 we're in a state of not-too-animated suspension.
The house is in a shambles. Wrapping paper and ribbons lie everywhere. And even if we are tidy by nature and those have been tucked neatly away somewhere, there are other signs of Christmas past.

Decorations start to look a little sad, most of the tinsel has lost its tin, and though no one will own up someone has eaten all the chocolate baubles that were on the tree, which by now itself is starting to droop. And most of us are drooping along with it. But why?

Isn't it all a feeling of relief? Sure it is. More than one person I spoke to (and I'm sure the same applies to many of those around you) greeted the end of Dec. 25 with the words: "Boy, I'm glad that's over!"

Yet it's kind of ironic that we spend so much time, energy — and money — get-ting ready for this one special day only to be glad when it's over, isn't it? I feel the getting-ready part is to blame. There's too much build-up and too much expected of us.

The long-distance telephone ads would like us to believe Christmas is not a day but a warm front that starts somewhere north of November and carries through to

Only for the retailers is it warm. For the rest of us it's a hot-under-the-collar front that moves in on us as soon as the summer holidays are over, bombards us with facts explaining why our loved ones need a whole list of the most useless commodities, then passes quickly on the 26th, leaving us let down and limp.

In between we have worn out our soles coarching

In between, we have worn out our soles searching for that special gift. And on Christmas morning, accompanied by the fanfare of drums we can almost hear in panied by the famare of drums we can almost near in our ears, we watch in eager anticipation as someone we love unwraps a box containing two left shoes; a long-player that has Roger Whittaker's Christmas songs listed on the cover but inside has a record filled with toddlers' tunes; and a sweater that is not only too small but when tried on brings almost immediate strangulation of the bust

Now even if you were lucky with sizes and the shoe store attendant knew his left foot from his right, somehow there's still a let-down feeling after giving the most perfect gift. Though it is, indeed, better to give than to receive, there isn't a feeling that can last long enough to make up, for the two or three methods. make up for the two or three months you've just been Christ's birthday. I'll bet most small children you ask today would spell Christmas without the t.

No other day of the year do me.

No other day of the year do we prepare for like Dec. 25. Food and drink on which to gorge ourselves we stock up in great quantities; gifts, often extravagant and not needed, we buy and store away like squirrels getting ready for winter.

Feeling guilty at completely ignoring relatives and friends for the rest of the year, we write letter after letter, card after card, to make up for it. And, after not bothering to visit elderly relatives for a year, we spring surprise after surprise, often running the risk of leaving in our wake an accompanying heart attack. And only at Christmas

Many of the churches don't help matters, either as they send well-meaning workers out to collect for Christmas hampers.

But why does it all have to be at Christmas? Wouldn't it be better if that elusive Christmas spirit could be spread throughout the year?

Couldn't the filling of hampers for the needy be done at any time? And letters and cards sent because we, ourselves, thought of it and not because we were told the time was right? Couldn't we perhaps give those we have gifts for no special reason except that we thought they love gifts for no special reason except that we thought they would like them?

In this way, the sharing and love that Christ taught would be experienced each day. Then on Boxing Day instead of feeling let down we'd be uplifted. And per-haps we might find again the real meaning of Christmas

Ansell predicted there will be dramatic changes next year for the Inner Harbor

"I believe the tank farms will be moved very soon and the city will soften its stance for development of that part of the harbor. They have favored residential develop-ment there but I predict they will come to favor a mix of light industry and residen-tial buildings and I won't rule out the possibility of at least one hotel."

An Evening with Les Francophones

OUR TUESDAY EVEning conversational French class has gone very well, and in recognition of that happy fact, Madame Le Professeur issued an invitation. We were all bidden to attend the annual Christmas dinner phones de Campbell River.

Madame then proceeded to brief us. A number of the association members were French Canadians from Quebec. But no need to be nervous; we would find them friendly, high-spirited and warmly hospitable. Only we must keep in mind that French would be the lan-

Some of its members had been working in the hall on decorations and dinner preparations since 2 in the afternoon. Others arrived. Already, the air carried the high-decibel hum of voices which indicates that a party is up and winging.

In a cautious sort of way. Win and I joined a conversation in French. It was an animated exchange, punctuated by laughter, but we found to our pleasure that we weren't too often left groping for word or phrase. Observe the food laid out on the serving tables, we were told. We would find it

Pass-Firing Pastorini Safe In a Flak Jacket

Rematches form the pairings in three of the four games scheduled this weekend as the National Football League playoffs move to the conference semi-final semi-final

On Saturday, Pittsburgh Steelers host Denver in an American Conference game two weeks after stopping the Broncos at the one-yard line on the final play of the game for a 21-17 victory. On Sun-day, Houston's wild-card Oilers travel to New Eng-land to take on the Patriots. Earlier this season, Houston topped the Pats 26-23.

In the National Conference, the wild-card Atlanta Falcons play the defending champion Dallas Cowboys on Saturday while Minnesota Vikings visit Los Angeles Rams on Sunday. The Fal-cons have not played Dallas this season but the Rams beat Minnesota 34-17 ear-lier.

The LA-Minnesota pairing field goal that broke a 7-7 ti marks the fifth time these two teams have collided in the playoffs. The Vikings have won the first four con-tests, the most recent one 14-7 a year ago in a California rainstorm.

The NFL playoffs opened Sunday when Houston and Atlanta advanced in wild-card games. The Oilers stung-Miami Dolphins 17-9 while the Falcons rallied for two touchdowns in the final five minutes to defeat Philadelphia Eagles 14-13.

Oilers quarterback Dan Pastorini, wearing a flak jacket to protect sore ribs and a brace on his knee, completed 20 of 29 passes for 306 yards in Houston's victory over Miami. Running backs Tim Wilson and Earl Campbell, both also nursing banged-up ribs, combined for 160 yards and scored on touchdown each. Ton Fritsch kicked a 35-yard in the fourth quarter. There was never doubt in my mind that I'd play," said Pastorini. The flak jacket, similiar to a bullet proof vest, was demonstrated its effectiveness by putting it on and then absorbing several body blows with a baseball bat.

The Eagles led Atlanta 13-0 with five minutes to play Steve Bartkowski manufactured another hairbreadth finish for the Falcons. The difference in the game was a missed extra point by Mike Michel, the Eagles' punter, who handled the place kicking duties in place of injured Nick Mike-Mayer. Michel also missed a 34-yard field goal try with 13 seconds left that would have won the game for Philadel-

"We were very fortunate to have won this game," said Leeman Bennett, coach of the Falcons When Bartkowski hit Wallace Francis with a 37-yard touchdown pass with 1:39 to play, it continued Atlanta's string of last-minute victories. Four times this season, the Falcons have won games by scoring in the final

This time, it seemed the Falcons had left too much time for the Eagles, and Philadelphia quickly moved in position for the field goal that could have won it. But-Michel missed.

Coaches Pick Patera

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Jack Patera, who guided Seattle Seahawks to a 9-7 record in the American Conference West. has been selected National Football League coach of the year in a poll conducted by the Sporting News.

Patera, the fourth straight AFC coach to be so honored, edged Pittsburgh Steelers' Chuck Noll in voting by the NFL's 28 head coaches. Dick Vermeil of Philadelphia and Walt Michaels of New York Jets tied for third, and Houston Washington's Washington's Oilers' Bum Phillips was fifth.

Under Patera, the expansion Seahawks have improved from a 2-12 record their first year to 5-9 in 1977 and the high-water mark in 1978 in a bid for a playoff berth.

Patera performed in the NFL for seven seasons as a mountain of Baltimore Colts. Chicago Cardinals and Dallas member of Baltimore Colts, Chicago Cardinals and Dallas

GOLDEN BALL

PARIS (AFP) - Kevin Keegan of SV Hamburg and England was named Tuesday by the maga-zine France Football as European player-of-the-year.

He is the third English soccer player to be awarded the Golden Ball, won by Sir Stanley Matthews in 1956 and Bobby Charlton in 1966. Denis Law of Scotland (1964) and George Best of Northern Ireland (1968) have also won. YOU WON'T BELIEVE WHAT WE DID TO OUR LOUNGE . . . EXPERIENCE IT!

LONDON (Reuter) — Liverpool was at its best at Old Trafford and United, despite the encouragement of 55,000 fans, was never in regaining its goal-scoring form with a 3-0 decision over Manchester United in English League First Division play Tuesday.

Victory kept first place Liverpool a point ahead of Everton in the First Division at the halfway stage of the season for both teams.

wich Albion, in third place with 29 points, won 2-1 away to Arsenal, which shares fourth place with Nottingham Forest.

I with 29 points, won 2-1 away lowed.

But Arsenal nearly managed to tie the score. Liam Brady scored from the pen-the game.

Ray Kennedy and Jimmy Case scored first-half goals and, although Manchester looked a shade less ragged after the interval, David Fairclough wrapped the game up by beating the defence alone, then scoring the third goal.

Everton overcame Man-chester City 1-0 on a 70th-minute volley from Billy Wright, while West Brom-Robson and Wally Brown and had two more disalaged to tie the score. Liam Brady scored from the pen-

SCOTT, BALL SNAP NATIONAL MARKS IN ONE-HOUR RUN

Debbie Scott of Esquimalt and Garth Ball of Victoria's Flying Y club raced to national records in the 15th annual Victoria Boxing Day one-hour race

Tuesday at Centennial Stadium.

Scott, one of Canada's premier distance runners, won the women's open event by govering 16.25 kilometers in the allotted hour. Runner-up was Gail McKean of Comox, the former national record-holder who covered 15.87 km. Peggy Neilson of Esquimalt (14.02) was third.

Ball finished fourth over- all in the men's sanc-tioned run but his distance of 17.1 km was a Canadian record for masters (over 40) runners.

economic forecasts for 1979 will play a part in determining what happens to the economy next year, says an influential economist.

But Nathan Laurie, director of national forecasting for the Conference Board in Canada denies that the pessimistic predictions of his organization and others could be termed self-fulfilling prophesies.

Replying to a reporter's questions about the psychological impact of crystalgazing by economists, Laurie said forecasts play a small role in influencing most people's behavior.

His remarks came after the board, a private re-search organization, had predicted that the New Year will bring higher unemployment, sustained inflation and slow economic growth.

growth prediction by the board was in the same range as the 3.5-per-cent prediction of the Royal Bank of Canada, the 2.6-per-cent prediction of Wood-Gundy Ltd. and a 3.5 per cent prediction by Alberta Treasur-er Merv Leitch.

Finance Minister Jean Chretien and the Parisbased Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) look for growth of about four per cent — more optimistic, but still not encouraging.

Laurie said economists often discuss whether their forecasts could exacerbate the country's economic stagnation, which has al-ready lasted for more than a year. He feels their predictions have far less impact on individual decision-making than more solid factual information such as monthly unemployment rate and cost-of-living statistics.

Laurie said the economists' job is to "call the shots as he sees them," doing his best to keep per-sonal optimism, pessimism and wishful thinking out of the forecast.

the forecast. He admitted the board had succeeded in this last December.

We were wide of the mark — far too optimistic, Laurie told reporters.

The government's growth forecast of five per cent was equally off-base.

Toronto MP James Gillies (PC-Don Valley) has accused Chretien of basing his economic planning on inac-curage forecasting. He demanded an explanation for the large margin of error in this year's forecast.

"Forecasting is a problem all over the world," Chretien replied. "It's a difficult business. We're doing our-OTTAWA (CP) — An oil price increase of 23 cents a barrel is expected in the New Year and perhaps as early as Jan. 1, says Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie.

The increase would add two-thirds of a cent to a gallon of gas or home heating oil.

"The increase will affect consumers if oil companies pass on the increase," the minister said.

The reason for the increase in the vere deferring a one dollar a barrel — three cents a gallon — price increase until July 1.

Gillespie said the current levy of 10 cents a barrel will rise to 33 cents, reflecting changes in world oil prices as well as greater production in the oil sands.

Syncrude Canada Ltd. is expected to be in full production at its oil sands plant in the New Year. Syncrude was offered world prices in 1975 when government stepped in to save the plant from financial collapse.

"The initial leak rate was about one-third of a gallon per hour mixing with 60 million gallons per hour of ordi-nary water, which is returned to the lake," Keane

The leak is in one of 2,500 half-inch diameter tubes in the heat exchanger, which draws excess heat from the nuclear reactor and transfers it to lake water. Keane said station person-

Easy-to-fix halftime munchies for watching the Rose Bowl

Snacking Rose Bowl St

The best thing to being in the California sunshine on New Year's Day is watching the Rose Bowl football game

While you are sharing a bit of the California lifestyle via TV, why not munch on a halftime snack featuring a fresh product from that

A dish that you'll find not only easy to prepare, but fun to eat, is a Mexican Pizza. And if you head for your kit-chen when the players go off to the dressing rooms at halftime, you'll be back with a tasty treat in time for the second-half kickoff.

The lineup for Mexican Pizza starts with a crisp flour tortilla, onto which is piled grated Cheddar cheese, spicy ground beef and chorizo (a Mexican sauz sage). Scattered onto the plate's midfield is sour cream and guacamole, a mashed avocado dip fla-vored with lemon juice and seasoned salt. Thick avocado slices are pointed in spoke fashion toward the sidelines of the plate. Com-plete the setting with your own Rose Bowl centerpiece

Enjoy these two California classics — the Rose Bowl and avocados — for a winning team New Year's Day

You Can Be a Bit Sneaky With Homemade Crackers

Washington Post Most cookbooks do not include recipes for homemade crackers. After all, a whole box of crackers can be purchased for about 75 cents. You can't bake them at home for much less. But with the money you plunk down on the counter for commercially made crackers, you are often buying a lot of artificial ingredients Supermarket crackers can contain retardants to prevent them from becoming moldy, antioxidants to stop them from turning rancid, and even ersatz flavoring to make you think you're eating cheese with your crackers. Store-bought crackers also contain a large amount of salt.

At home they can be baked using only fresh ingredients. And for those on salt-free diets or those who like to serve crackers with salty cheeses such as cheddar, they can be made without

The sneaky cook can for-tify them with soy flour, brewer's yeast and wheat germ to provide a nourishing after-school snack as an alternative to cookies or po-tato chips. And made with whole grains, they are an excellent source of incomplete protein, vitamins and Rolling out cracker dough is similar to making pie crust. A floured surface such as a pastry cloth, a large square piece of canvas which has been dusted with flour, helps keep the dough from sticking. An inexpensive 24-inch rolling pin can be made from a 1%-inch wooden down and 1%-inch wooden dowel purchased at a lumberyard for around $1.20.

To make crisp, homemade crackers, the dough must be rolled very thin. Since they can burn easily, they must be watched carefully during the last few minutes of bakangles or rectangles eliminates the scraps that must be rerolled if you cut the dough into circles. A roller, the type used for cutting pizza, is perfect for making straight lines without tearing the dough.

For a bit of variety, any unbaked crackers can be brushed with milk or slightly beaten egg whites and sprinkled with sesame or poppy seeds or coarse kosher salt Make sure crackers are crisp and dry before storing them in a tightly covered jar or tin. If they become soft, reheat in a 250-degree oven

Land of Plenty, There's Malnutrition

By RUTH FREMES And ZAK SABRY

There was a time when getting enough food to stay alive was humanity's main challenge. Today, this prob-lem continues to dominate many populations. By con-trast, there are peoples on

up to this earth (Canadians in-cluded) who worry little about finding enough to eat. Yet, in every population, there continues to be concern about malnutrition.

How come?

Malnutrition is a broad term that refers to any deviation from proper nutri-tion. It does not afflict only those who have little to eat, but also those who overeat. Malnutrition means both undernutrition and overnutri-tion. Ironically, they both have similar consequences for the individual; they reduce life expectancy, lower resistance to disease, and reduce productivity.

The message from the Food and Agriculture organization of the United Nations, in a report on the world food situation, published this year, is that the world food problem is not only low production in the face of an ever-increasing population, but also poor distribution of food among nations. The hungry Third World could do with some of the extra food that the affluent nations could well relinquish.

For the "have" nations, it is the old syndrome of having to finish everything on your plate. Often, it is healthier, and more economical, not to. Of course, it would have been wiser not to have put so much on your plate in the first place.

We know of a weight re-duction club that teaches its members to eat less by using smaller plates. This means smaller size servings, and fewer calories.

Our affluent diet is not only characterized by large servings, but also by many expensive and wasteful foods. Relative to less affluent nations, we consume more animal proteins and fats in the form of meats, eggs and dairy products. We tend to refine our cereals and sugar instead of eating whole-grains, vegetables and fruits. Increasingly, we favor commercially-manufactured (often thought of as convenience) foods over un-processed products. Our affluent diet is so deeply entrenched that we have come to identify with things "as American as apple pie" and 'as Canadian as maple syrup." It is sometimes dif-ficult for people to question the value of French fries or Danish pastry.

By the traditional measure of good nutrition, the affluent diet should be a healthy one. The protein supply is generous. The pro-tein quality is high. Calories are plentiful. The key vita-mins and minerals, for which putritionists Faus which nutritionists have established a standard of intake, appear to be there. No one will deny that scurvy, pellagra, beri-beri and Kwa-shiorkor, which represent the classical picture of mal-nutrition do not exist in curnutrition, do not exist in our affluent society. And, we have our affluent diet to thank for this. But, malnutrition does have more than

In place of observing the classical image of malnutrition, we are seeing new conand die. Nutritionists are forced to look at malnutri-tion from new angles and to re-define the meaning of good nutrition.

Over the past many decades, the North American diet has shown a rise in the amount of fat, particularly saturated fat. For many individuals, fat could account for half or more of their for half or more of their calories. There was a time when nutritionists would not have cared where your calories came from; now they do. There is a strong association between the amount of fat consumed, particu-larly saturated fat, and the degree of risk of coronary heart disease.

With increased awareness of the consequences of high saturated fat consumption, more people appear to shift to oils and soft margarines. The average consumption of meat (including poultry) has now levelled off at about 200 pounds per year for every man, woman and child in Canada. In contrast, the average meat consumption in many less-affluent countries falls below 20 pounds a year per person.

Leaving the nutritional consequences aside for a moment, we should not that the highly marbled type of beef we produce tends to be wasteful of food resource. The cattle are raised on feedlots, consuming about 10 pounds of grain for every pound they put on. Direct consumption of the cereal grain, a luxury to many developing countries, would increase the efficiency of the food system, and feed more mouths in a hungry

Direct consumption of whole-grains, as bread and breakfast cereals, is low in our affluent society. Most of the bread we consume is refined. That means the re-moval of the bran, which is high in dietary fibre or roughage. Considering that our consumption of raw fruits and vegetables tends to be low, it is not surprising that our low roughage diet appears to promote a num-ber of diseases of the diges-tive system. There was a time when nutritionists did not worry about the amount of roughage in our diets; now they do. There appears to be a link between the amount of fibre in the diet and the occurrence of diverticulosis developing countries. The global consumption per capita has increased by half sugar consumption per year for every man, woman and child is about 100 pounds in Canada, the U.S., Cuba, Costa Rica, Australia, Israel and most Western European countries. By contrast, the annual sugar consumption in Japan, Taiwan and the Philippines is only about 50 pounds per person, but climbing fast.

There is a strong relationship between the amount of Sugar consumed and the sugar consumed, and the frequency of its consump-tion in the diet, and dental diseases. The importance of controlling the amount of sugar consumed in the management of diabetes has long been known. There is also evidence that many obese people are lured to overeating with sweetened foods than with un-sweetened ones.

In addition to our affluent diet, our affluent sedentary lifestyle has contributed to the risk of the many diseases that plague us. Our rich refined diet and our almost-motionless way of life constitute a drastic departure from the conditions under which humans evolved for millions of years. It is no wonder that

When Birds and Rice Are Ready, Be Quick

By PIERRE FRANEY

For anyone who cares about new experiences in eating, one of the more obvious pleasures of travel is the sampling of dishes not altogether common in one's own kitchen or milieu. On a recent trip to Italy, particu-larly in Tuscany, we dined several times on various birds stuffed with a blend of prosciutto and rosemary, a most agreeable combination of flavors and certainly not common in the French rep-

We had a picnic in the company of friends who contributed their share of home-cooked dishes. One of the best was cold roast quail stuffed with rosemary and prosciutto. Cooked ham of the domestic sort could cer-tainly be substituted, but the filling would lose part of its full, assertive taste.

Sometimes the stuffings are made with pieces of pro-sciustto rolled around sprigs of rosemary; sometimes the two are chopped together. The combination makes a fine filling for Cornish game hens and we used them re-cently in such fashion. The results are pleasant, to say the least.

One of the best accom-paniments for the dish is a simply made rice baked with the livers of the game hens and chopped mush-

For accounting purposes, let it be said that game hens stuffed with prosciutto and rosemary is one of those deadline dishes when you play the game of 60-minute gourmet. It is, indeed, possible to prepare and cook the dish in an hour, but you won't have many seconds to spare when the roast birds and the rice are cooked and ready to serve.

The birds require about 45 minutes' cooking time, the rice about 20 minutes or less. Therefore you should start the chickens and get them into the oven before you turn to cook the rice.

4. Rub a metal baking dish with one tablespoon of butter. Arrange the birds on their backs on the baking dish. Dot each with the remaining butter. Place one slice of fatback over each bird to cover. Scatter the necks, gizzards and hearts around the birds. Place the dish on top of the stove and heat until butter is sizzling.

5. Place the dish in the oven and bake 15 minutes. 6. Remove the pieces of fatback and turn the chick-

At $100 a gram, coke is one of the most expensive drugs on the street — about the same price as heroin but more readily available and socially acceptable. People who might not use another drug are willing to pay dearly for cocaine because Drug-watchers say today's coke craze is reminiscent of the fad which swept show business 50 years ago. In those days, actors on the West Coast and jazz musicians in the East discovered cocaine could help them perform. In 1978, there are whispers that co-caine is affecting Hollywood's business decisions and creative performances.

In her autobiography, actress Elizabeth Ashley "Now everyone knows, even though they don't dare say so, that cocaine can get you up to do a show. It may not be the best thing for you but it's far from the worst. And it works. Especially if you're

U.S. POLLUTION TACK STRESSES FLEXIBILITY

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) officials have issued a more flexible, less costly set of air pollution rules under which industries can create their own programs for meeting over-all cleanup

The result should be the same as under previous rigid requirements, which set specific cleanup targets for each part of an industry's operation, officials said. But they said the new rules should sharply reduce cleanup An EPA spokesman said under the new plan, such industries as steel producers, chemical companies, automakers, electric utilities and oil refiners can determine how much pollution to allow from each process.

The name "bubble" was given to the new program because a theoretical dome of air is identified over each plant and the air in that dome must meet the original

Officials gave as an example of the potential savings an oil refinery in-which it might cost $4,300 to clean up a ton of pollution escaping from leaks in pipes but only $50 a ton to eliminate the same amount of pollution by tightening up storage tank roofs and preventing tion by tightening up storage tank roofs and preventing

Air Warns Beasts of Quakes?

WASHINGTON (UPI) —
Scientists for years have wondered why animals act so strangely just before an earthquake strikes. A German biochemist thinks he knows the answer.

Dr. Helmut Tributsch of the Max Planck Institute in Berlin suggests animals are sensing electrically charged aerosol particles produced

He said the proposed electrical phenomena may be similar to electrical charges in the atmosphere that precede major storms, and the atmosphere that precede major storms, and the same the same that the same animals may be sensing and reacting to a "phantom storm" just before an earth-

Bugged Olives are Out Spies Flourish — But

WASHINGTON - Floyd Purvis, manager of security for Texas Instruments, laughs at the notion that someone may be out to bug his boss' office — or his drink. Such espionage ex-otics might have a place in spy novels and Hollywood's imagination, but in the real world, says Purvis, corporate secrets are more often given away than stolen.

Most of the time, company leaks trickle from unsuspecting sources: casual sales talk at a convention, a published journal article or the proud boasting by a spouse of a husband's or wife's latest accomplish-ment. Workers who talk too much, who change jobs or who get pirated by another company — these are the everyday worries of corporate security directors.

'Industrial espionage is the most overrated topic of conversation since Breathing Bras," Purvis quipped. "It's rather mundane, really. I'm much less concerned ith the olive being bugged than I am with the gin loosening a guy's lip.

It all sounds like pretty tame stuff. So why all the guards, the internal TV monitors, the secured doors.

technology corridors at Texas Instruments or wherever else in corporate America there is inventive, competitive work underway? Because every now and then, a real spy shows up and blows everyone's Court records are full of instances which suggest that nefarious forces frequently poke around the business world. Tales abound of spies in the sky, bugs in the boardroom, secret agents in the trash and hidden cameras everywhere. This snooping is carried out by both ama-teurs and professionals for enticing fees. It is motivated by the hope of finding a shortcut to the end of the other guy's rainbow.

Corporate espionage has always been a more thriving business than companies care to acknowledge. And today it is as widespread, sophisticated and lucrative as ever.

'It's a very active field," asid Timothy Walsh, a top consultant on security mat-ters who lists as clients at number of blue-chip cor-porations. "And the level of awareness that such activity goes on is currently up.

Accurate figures on losses to U.S. industry caused by espionage are, of course, hard to come by. It's a subject few businesses care to talk about. The Commerce Department, pursuing an ambitious study on business crime, has been unsuccessful at compiling spy data, "It's become more of an important discussion item with us in recent months." said Sharon Roach, a govern-ment researcher. "But we have an information gap. Even the American Society for Industrial Security in Washington, which holds seminars on all sorts of sebarb wire to fending off the Mafia, has never devoted a session to industrial spying. "Our members don't seem to want to discuss it," said E.J. Criscuoli Jr., the society's executive director "I imagine it's too sensitive a subject.

But there is no question that the damage done by a secret exposed can beconsi-derable. In one case several years ago, Monsanto valued a simple set of stolen finaneial plans at $1 million. In another celebrated case, IBM estimated it lost $160 million in sales as a result of

The costs and chances of espionage have only been compounded by the multiplication of items worth stealing, from pricing plans and strategy papers to research and development schemes. A number of other developments have been conspiring to keep spying on the rise. Among them:

The hectic scramble for profits, making some managements more willing to stoop to unsavory methods. A high degree of executive mobility, causing a cor-responding decline in loyalty to a given corporation. The mounting value of products and processes developed in U.S. research labs, giving the corporate

-The widespread tendency for otherwise alert companies to put all their corporate secrets into a computer — and then fail to guard that computer carefully enough.

Also, industrial espionage has taken on an international character lately, reflect-ing the more competitive nature of world markets. Leaders of several U.S. semiconductor companies recently complained about suspicious snooping by the Japanese, who have been scurrying frantically to gain a technological edge in the

The allegations have been directed at so-called "liai-son" offices set up by such companies as Fujitsu and Hitachi, two of Japan's top semiconductor and computer manufacturers. These offices, which serve as bases for Japanese engineers visiting and studying in the United States are located on the San Francisco Peninsula in the heart of the American electronics com-

The Japanese say all their information-gathering efforts are above-board, such as attending conferences and courses or commission ing technical and market studies from local data houses. But U.S. competitors have charged that the liaison men cultivate secret personal contacts within local companies, track down executives and engineers who change jobs to pump them for information, and engage in further questionable surveillance. The Americans concede that much of their concern is based more on a general suspicion than any specific proof of illegality. They have yet to produce evi-dence solid enough to convict a Japanese company.

"It's just a feeling," said John Oloughlin, director of security for Intel, a leading semiconductor company. "We haven't really unco-vered anything. It's like grasping for smoke."

However, there is some precedent to support the be-lief that military secrets aren't the only kind of secrets foreigners go after. In the early 1960s, Japan was reported to have established in Tokyo a training school for industrial spies. Several years ago, the FBI broke a Romanina spy ring which had tried to steal fom the Ford Motor Co. the plans for a special glass-making pro-cess. And last summer, the cess. And last summer, the U.S. Attorney's Office in South Carolina announced a new indictment against Mit-subishi Plastics Industries and Mitsubishi Chemical Industries, along with several others, in an alleged conspiracy to bribe a plant manager and buy secrets belonging to Celanese Corp pertaining to the manufac-ture of a high-quality polyester film.
As might be expected, top officials at major U.S. firms deny they ever initiate spy probes against either their mestic or foreign competition. The chances of get-ting caught are too great, they say, and the stigma of being branded a secretstealer is not worth the effort. Companies, it seems, are less benign about coun tenancing espionage than

Many firms own a set of wiretap-detection machines, which alone can cost $10,000. It has become standard procedure in many instances to "sweep" meeting

Skiers Caught In Avalanche

KELOWNA (CP) - Two persons caught in an avalanche while skiing at Big White mountain about 56 ki-lometres northeast of here were in satisfactory condition in hospital here Tuesday.

Steve Denroche, 23, and Clayton Allen, 16, both of Kelowna, were skiing an isolated run that had been closed because of slides when the avalanche happened said a ski patrol spokesman.

Denroche, who suffered torn ligaments in his legs, used tree branches as crutches as he struggled down to the lodge area of the mountain for help. The 4.5-kilometres trip took six hours. A ski patrol search party was sent out and Allen was rescued eight hours after the avalanche happened. He suffered a broken leg.

When today's deal came up in a tournament, most of up in a tournament, most of the South declarers arrived at a minor-suit game contract. To the best of my knowledge, all of them went down except the one whom I happened to be kibitzing. I know he played the hand correctly. I can only assume that all of the others misplayed it, for proper play guarantees the contract.

With ten diamonds in the North-South hands, the outstanding diamonds figured to be divided 2-1. So, at trick three, the ace of diamonds was laid down. When West failed to follow suit, South became doomed to defeat, since East now had two trump winners.

When I saw the deal played, after ruffing the second heart lead, declarer did not cash the diamond ace at trick three. Instead, he entered dummy via the club king and led the jack of diamonds. When Each of diamonds. monds. When East played low, so did South. As is evident, the jack won the trick and as is equally evident,

It should be noted that if dummy's jack of diamonds had lost to West's (hypothetical) queen or king, the contract would still be there for the taking, for in this case only one diamond would now be outstanding; and it would be felled by South's ace when the latter South's ace when the latter regained the lead. U.S. officials avoided explicitly saying so but they strongly suggested that the complications arose from the Soviet side.

It was clear that the two sides failed to settle the two major issues holding up agreement. These are en-coding of Soviet missile test data and the definition of certain types of cruise missiles. In addition, some issues were raised which the U.S. side thought had been settled previously

The unexpected turn of events dashed soaring hopes and produced grim faces and unusually long negotiating sessions totalling eight hours during the course of the day. The talks ended with an official statement that most of the outstanding issues have been "essentially resolved" and that a U.S.-Soviet summit meeting has been agreed on "in princi-

Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko made it clear anew, however, that all major questions must be settled prior to the expected summit meeting of President Carter and Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev. He added that some of the out-standing issues are "important."

In what amounted to a joint statement which was drafted by the two delegations and read by Vance, the foreign ministers said timing of the summit meeting will be "subject to careful consideration by both sides."

Lack of agreement in Sats urday's Geneva talks all but eliminates any chance that Carter will be able to play host to Brezhnev in mid-January for signing of a SALT treaty, as Carter had desired.

Vance and Gromyko expressed hope that the remaining issues can be re-solved through "regular diplomatic channels" with-out need for the two foreign ministers to meet again. Before the Geneva talks, both men had expressed their in-tention to make this the last substantive negotiating ses-sion on SALT.

No date for the diplomatic contacts through ambassa-dors or the lower-level delegations of the two countries in Geneva was announced. In view of the Christmas and New Year's holidays in the United States and the important New Year holidays in the Soviet Union, little progress is expected until after the first of the year.

American negotiators insist that they are under no time pressure to reach a quick agreement.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD * CLASSIFIED ACTION

AD 1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. It you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond-more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite in-formation. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the read-er-prospect to reach you. Al-ways give your felephone num-per or your name and address, your name and address, hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course stop your ad as soon as bou get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The an-swer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT wery inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer: the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courfeous, efficient advisor will be olad to help you word and place your order. And remember. Classified Action Advisor of the course of the

OTTAWA — The British government is engaged in a gamble to win the right for British Airways to fly into Western Canada. Its top card in this game of give-and-take is Air Canada's right to continue operating out of its base at Heathrow, London's main airport.

That is the conviction of government and airline officials here. It is a concern that was brought out in the open in the House of Commons recently by an Alberta MP, Don Mazankowski, the transport critic for the official opposition.

The British have long had a reputation of being shrewd, hard bargainers. When they set out to get something through what they politely like to can "negotiation" they usually get it. Such is the case apparently with the rights for British Airways to serve Calgary, Edmonton and and the U.K. The Canadian government-owned airline maintains that new designations can only take place after the negotiation of a new agreement.

An air bilateral is basically a trade agreement in which Canada surrenders valuable operating rights to a foreign airline in return for rights of equal value for a Canadian carrier in the foreign nation. As in any trade agreement, caution must be exercised by the government to ensure that Canada does not surrender more in valuable operating rights than it wins from the other nation in return

Air Canada would not be against designation of British Airways to more Canadian cities, it is understood, provided a new bilateral agreement is negotiated with the U.K. which provided Canada with operating rights of equal

But by introducing the right of Air Canada to continue operating out of Heathrow Airport at London, the British have stacked the deck, in the opinion of many Canadians who are involved.

The British like to pretend that the move from Heathrow and the bilateral negotiations are not linked.

But its no coincidence that the warnings to Air Canada that it is to be turfed out of Heathrow have come during the bilateral talks which are due to reconvene in January,

Forest Hike Brings Bit Of 'Peace On Earth'

Looking for a little "peace on earth?" Why not try a walk in the woods. There are woodland parks near Victoria, some larger than others, where peace and quiet may be found.

Saxe Point Park on Esquimalt waterfront has two short trails cut through woodland, with tall Douglas firs, an Arbutus or two, and columns of ivy making green pillars in the dim light.

This little park is just far enough away from main road traffic to provide complete quiet. Only the small sounds of the woodland are obvious. On a windless day, these are limited in winter to the movements of resident birds and perhaps the murmur of water lapping the beach below.

As you explore the trails, your attention is taken from searching for a known patch of Twin-flower with its shining little leaves catching a ray of sunlight through the tree branches, to following the quick movements of a small flock of juncoes flitting among the tangle of wild honeysuckle and wild rose.

And the smaller movements of another bird searching the rough bark of a tall fir makes you aware that the life of a woodland is continuous, in winter as in other seasons.

Inasmuch as the summer drought dried out the growth of Licorice-fern that grew on the lichen-covered rocks among the firs, fall rains have brought out the new crop of fronds — of brightest spring green.

In a swampy part of the trail, notice the tall sword-fern that takes over at the edges of permanently moist spots. These make handsome clumps of spreading fronds, the largest of which can be up to 24 inches long.

The underbrush nearby is likely to be composed of one of the wild roses, the Salmon-berry and the Western

Even on a winter walk, the remains of seed heads on these shrubs can be noticed. No wonder many small birds find shelter in these little wooded areas close to the 12 Pearl Buck city. Food is present for limited numbers and is seldom covered with snow to the level of the shrub branches.

On a sunny day after a snowstorm, the birds will be found searching for seeds, or grubs, in early daylight and mid-afternoon. They make very little sound to break the quiet of the woods; occasionally a single small note can be 15 Large heard if you are close to the bird.

In the tops of the firs, there will likely be the ever17 Williams present crows but they must keep to the more open areas for feeding.

18 Flavoring The crows and the seagulls are the noisiest of the wildlife at this season but they, too, have their part to play as scavengers on land and shore.

Coma, Boumedienne

ALGIERS (AP) - President Houari Boumedienne, a soft-spoken guerrilla commander who became a fiery pillar of Third World radicalism, died today of a rare blood disease after 40 days in a coma, leaving a power vacuum in his vast North African country.

Word of the 53-year-old Boumedienne's death brought hundreds of thou-sands of grieving Algerians cortege bore his body through throngs of mourn-ers to the Palace of the People, where it will lie in state until a funeral Friday. Boumedienne, Algeria's leader for the past 13 years, had been kept alive at Al-giers' Mustafa Hospital by life-support systems tended by top physicians from the United States, Europe, Cuba and the Soviet Union. Algerian state radio said he died at 3:55 a.m. (6:55 p.m. Tuesday

The Algerian flag flew at half-staff, and world leaders eulogized the dead leader. Boumedienne was not known to have designated a successor, and the job of choosing the next president fell to an eight-man Council of the Revolution, the nearest thing to a cabinet in

We'll Swim - Refugees

Times News Services Hong Kong refused land-ing permission today to 2,700 desperate Vietnamese refugees holding a ship's captain virtual prisoner and threatening to swim ashore.

"We have no choice but to jump overboard," said Nguyen Thua Hon, a 39-year-old engineer who spoke for the refugees off Hong Kong aboard the Huey Fong, a 2,794-ton Panamanian-registered freighter that picked them up from nine small boats floundering in the South China Sea.

But Hong Kong Security Secretary Lewis Davies rei-terated the government's re-fusal to extend landing permission to the vessel that has been anchored just a few hundred feet from the col-ony's Po Toi island since it arrived Saturday.

"The government's stand remains that in accordance with agreements accepted by the United Nations High gees," Davies told a news conference. "The vessel will be required to proceed to its next port of call."

Meanwhile, About 200 other Vietnamese are be-lieved to have drowned at sea when they tried to scramble aboard a freighter which arrived in Manila today with 2,300 refugees

Werner Blatter, Philip-pines representative of the UN High Commission for Refugees, said the drownings occurred a few days ago when the Panamanianregistered freighter Tung An stopped to pick up refu-gees in the South China

Blatter said the Tung An's captain, Sheu Dah Shing, told him the freighter was on a voyage from Bangkok to Hong Kong when it spotted a refugee boat in international

A foreign ministry state ment said those who re quired medical treatment would be allowed to go ashore but would have to return to the vessel when recovered.

"Conditions aboard the ship are appalling," Blatter said. "It is hopelessly overcrowded.

We'll Swim - Refugees

Times News Services Hong Kong refused land-ing permission today to 2,700 desperate Vietnamese refugees holding a ship's captain virtual prisoner and threa-tening to swim ashore.

"We have no choice but to jump overboard," said Nguyen Thua Hon, a 39-year-old engineer who spoke for the refugees off Hong Kong aboard the Huey Fong, a 2,794-ton Panamanian-re-gistered freighter. gistered freighter that picked them up from nine small boats floundering in South China Sea.

aboard," he added in an in-terview on shore-to-ship

But Hong Kong Security Secretary Lewis Davies rei-terated the government's refusal to extend landing permission to the vessel that has been anchored just a few hundred feet from the col-ony's Po Toi island since it arrived Saturday.

"The government's stand remains that in accordance with agreements accepted by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refu gees," Davies told a news conference. "The vessel will be required to proceed to its next port of call."

Meanwhile, a b o u t 200 other Vietnamese are believed to have drowned at sta when they tried to scramble aboard a freighter which arrived in Manila today with 2,300 refugees aboard.

Werner Blatter, Philippines representative of the UN High Commission for Refugees, said the drownings occurred a few days ago when the Panamanian-

registered freighter Tung An stopped to pick up refu-gees in the South China

Blatter said the Tung An's captain, Sheu Dah Shing, told him the freighter was on a voyage from Bangkok to Hong Kong when it spotted a refugee boat in international waters near Vietnam.

"When it stopped to pick them up, more and more boats kept appearing," Blat-ter said. "The captain esti-mated 200 had drowned in the mad scramble to get aboard the freighter.

The Tung An, already turned away by Brunei, a country on the north coast of Borneo, has been refused permission to land its refu gees in the Philippines.

A foreign ministry state-ment said those who required medical treatment would be allowed to go ashore but would have to return to the vessel when recovered.

"Conditions aboard the ship are appalling," Blatter said. "It is hopelessly overcrowded.

Oil Strikes Force Iran To Rations

Times News Services TEHRAN — Soldiers fired on a funeral procession for an anti-shah professor today, and hospital officials said at least four of the thousands of marching mourners were killed.

The government, meanwhile, imposed fuel ration-ing on this oil-rich country because of a crippling petro-leum workers' strike,

Officials at Pahlavi Hospital said it received four bodies and 22 wounded from the procession attack. A spokesman for the National Front, the chief opposition group, said at least six had been killed, and a govern ment spokesman denied there were any deaths, though he sáid several per-sons had been wounded.

The Front spokesman said several persons were shot dead in other clashes today between security forces and demonstrators in Tehran

At one point, mobs of anti-hah demonstrators streamed toward the U.S. embassy, but Iranian troops fired automatic weapons in the air to chase them. The protestors scattered, then regrouped and moved on to other areas.

"Today was a very deci-sive day," the Front spokesman said. "We think it is going to continue to an extreme end."

Spies Flourish — But Bugged Olives are Out

By BRADLEY TRAHAM Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Floyd Purvis, manager of security Texas Instruments, laughs at the notion that someone may be out to bug his boss' office — or his drink. Such espionage exotics might have a place in spy novels and Hollywood's imagination, but in the real world, says Purvis, corporate secrets are more often given away than stolen. Most of the time, company leaks trickle from unsuspecting sources: casual sales talk at a convention, a published journal article or the proud boasting by a

In the early 1960s, Japan-was reported to have established Tokyo a training school for industrial spies. Several years ago, the FBI broke a Romanina spy ring which had tried to steal fom the Ford Motor Co. the plans for a special glass-making pro-cess. And last summer, the Attorney's Office in South Carolina announced a new indictment against Mitsubishi Plastics Industries and Mitsubishi Chemical In-dustries, along with several others, in an alleged con-spiracy to bribe a plant manager and buy secrets belong-ing to Celanese Corp. pertaining to the manufacture of a high-quality polyes ter film.

As might be expected, top officials at major U.S. firms deny they ever initiate spy probes against either their domestic or foreign competition. The chances of getting caught are too great, they say, and the stigma of being branded a secretstealer is not worth the ef-fort. Companies, it seems, are less benign about countenancing espionage than mon display of we-wantnothing-to-do-with-this-sortof-thing, notified Intel and the local police, and strung the consultant along into a

Those who make a living in the spy and counterspy business insist that the James Bond aspects of their trade have been overplayed because these are the most dramatic. But there is a variety of technically, advanced paraphernalia on the market for the resourceful

The well-equipped spy now has at his disposal mi-crophones no bigger than a shirt button, amplifiers the size of a fingernail, fountain pens that contain sophisticated listening devices and tiny tape recorders that easily can be hidden amid the clutter of an executive's desk drawer.

He has plenty of other electronic aids as well: parabolic microphones that can up a conversation in ordinary tones 100 yards away, infrared snooperscopes that can read small print at the same distance and in the park; "spike" mikes that resemble nails and which can be driven into a wall and will detect conversations within 100 yards

Even the tales of the bugged olive in the martini are no exaggeration. Robert Rosberg, an official of Mosler Electronic Systems (now a subsidiary of American Standard), described a device smaller than a cube of sugar that contains its own transmitter and bat-teries. "You can put it in an olive, drop it in a glass and use the toothpick as an antenna," said Rosberg.

To block the electronic snoop, companies have invested in an equally exotic - and expensive - array of counterespionage equip-ment. Many firms own a set of wiretap-detection machines, which alone can cost $10,000. It has become standard procedure in many instances to "sweep" meeting rooms just prior to important conferences. Many companies also are likely to have invested in devices to protect computer microwave transmissions. 'At one time, these devices were considered exotic by industry," said Walsh, the consultant. "Now they are less expensive and more ex-

In the long run, though, the outside spy makes the minimum use of equipment and the maximum use of people: disgruntled re-searchers whose projects have been shelved, lowly paid employees squeezed for cash, embittered executives passed over for promotion He also may wear any of several guises: a curious stockholder, a disguised fire inspector, a writer, a job applicant, a business feigning interest in a potential

Umont O. Cumming, who used to operate a security consulting firm in midtown New York and was reputed to be America's top industrial spy-for-hire, once boast ed he had never used a bugging device in his life. "I don't need to," he claimed.
